Consumers Want the Right to Know

Americans want to know what’s in their food. American consumers want the same rights as consumers in 64 countries who already have the right to know whether their food contains genetically engineered (GE) ingredients.¹

Support for GE labeling crosses demographic boundaries. Polls show that 93 percent of Americans want the right to know – regardless of age, income, education or party affiliation.²

Millions of Americans have taken action. Nearly 1.4 million Americans have signed a petition to FDA demanding the right to know what’s in their food.³
